Warsaw is the place where Jenny Whittredge, young and pretty companion to an English lady, lost her heart to a romantic Polish Count, Stephen Orvid. It happened in 1939, when the world was brewing and big events already foreshadowed their coming. Only the aristocratic family of the young Count did not want to notice any change in the world and objected fiercely to the middle class standing of the girl. Fortunately, Stephen had different ideas and his defiance of his family to marry her was proof of that.

Make Estate Pay

The girl was brought up in a democratic country and her sense of equality influenced Stephen. Together they found a way to make their big estate pay by treating the peasants as equals. And when the war broke out, the courage and fearlessness that sprang from their love made them stay in Warsaw together until its armies crumbled before the Nazi onslaught.

Ida Lupino, as Jenny Whittredge, plays the part of the young girl with the tremendous will power and intensity.

Paul Henreid, the romantic find of the season, can be remembered for his performances in Warner Bros.' "Now Voyager" and "Casablanca." Now as the young Polish Count, he has the chance to portray the customs and habits of his continent, which comes to him with

SYNOPSIS

In March, 1939, young and modern Jenny Whittredge (Ida Lupino), and Mrs. Bromley (Mary Boland), her employer, were buying antiques in Warsaw. While selecting their purchases, Jenny makes the chance acquaintance of tall and romantic Count Stephen Orvid (Paul Henreid). They fall in love and despite his family's objection to her middle class standing, Stephen marries Jenny.

After the marriage, the struggle between the couple and the family goes on, especially after they find out that Jenny and Stephen intend to modernize the family estate to make it pay. Stephen's mother, Zofya (Nazimova), tries to make the best of it but his intensely religious, spinster sister, Janina (Nancy Coleman) hates Jenny. Count Paval Orvid (Victor Francen), the wealthy and influential uncle, tries to win Stephen away from his wife's influence.

The farming of the estate is successful and on the eve of the harvest they are all hopefully waiting for rain. But, instead, they hear bombs falling on Warsaw. The war has broken out. Stephen has to join his regiment and leave Jenny with his hostile family to carry on as best as she can. But the war is brief and Stephen soon comes home wounded. Count Pavel urges the family to flee from the country and makes all arrangements. But Stephen and Jenny decide to stay behind and defend Warsaw as part of a people's army.

'In Our Time' Stars Lupino, Henreid

The Strand Theatre will present Warner Bros.' new production, "In Our Time," next Friday. This remarkable love story, clouded with the hardships of current events, takes place in Poland, just at the beginning of the war.

Ida Lupino and Paul Henreid have the leading roles in the production. Also featured are Nancy Coleman, Mary Boland, Victor Francen and Nazimova, who returns to the screen after a long absence. "In Our Time" was directed by Vincent Sherman and produced by Jerry Wald. The original screen story was written by Ellis St. Joseph and Howard Koch.

Strand Offers 'In Our Time' Today

Warner Bros.' new production, "In Our Time," will open at the Strand Theatre today, bringing to the screen one of the most stirring love stories of the season.

Ida Lupino in the leading role plays an English girl who falls in love with Paul Henreid, a Polish Count, in Warsaw. Their marriage is happy until the war breaks out and the young husband has to leave. The story shows how the love of two people can give them courage and confidence to fight traditions, prejudices and even the hardships of war.

The original screen play was written by Ellis St. Joseph and Howard Koch. Vincent Sherman directed the film.

For Ida Lupino this is a new type of role. After the tough sister in "The Hard Way" for which she worthe New York Film Critics award, and the jitterbug in "Thank Stars," she plays the young girl who becomes the wife of a Polish nobleman. She represents the modern generation and brings forth fresh air into the stiff, aristocratic surroundings.

Paul Henreid, who made his Hollywood film debut in Warner Bros.' "Now Voyager" and was seen later in "Casablanca," scores again in "In Our Time." As the Polish Count in the picture, he portrays the type of man who will build the new post-war world.

Fall in Love

Ida Lupino and Paul Henreid are the actual figures of the film's tender love story. A young girl meets a Polish Count in a small antique shop in Warsaw. They fall in love and no matter how his family objects, he is determined to marry her. The couple is happy, despite the obvious hostility of his old-fashioned family. Their estate is neglected and they have plans to make it pay. But the war breaks out and destroys all their careful planning. The young husband has to leave for the front. Left alone she carries on as best as she can until he comes home wounded. The enemy is nearing and his family plans to escape, but the young couple stays to fight the invading Germans to the end.

Nancy Coleman highlights her screen career in the part of a haughty, aristocratic girl. Nazimova returns to the screen as the mother of the young Count. Also featured are Mary Boland and Victor Francen.

The picture was produced by Jerry Wald and directed by Vincent Sherman. The original screen play was written by Ellis St. Joseph and Howard Koch.

Lupinos Go Back to 1642 In Theatrical History

Mat 201-30c

Ida Lupino, who won the New York Film Critics award for her performance in "The Hard Way," is co-starred with Paul Henreid in Warner Bros.' "In Our Time," which opens Friday at the Strand Theatre.

"Last of the Lupinos."

This is the title of an article on Ida Lupino which was prepared by a national magazine, based upon her presence as the last member of a famous 300year-old stage family still surviving in the theater.

Her father, Stanley Lupino, great Shakespearean actor and later comedian of the English stage, was killed in the blitz on London.

Much of the material on the Lupinos, considered by many to have a prime claim on the title of "The Royal Family," has already been compiled by Ida, who has had a biography of her father in preparation for several years.

Available for reproduction is a remarkable poster from the year 1642, advertising the talents of the founder of the family, one Georgius Luppino, who is represented as appearing at the Black Raven Inn, West Smithfield, in: "Jiggs, sarabands, and country dances to the admiration of all spectators together with the merry conceits of Squire Punch and Sir John Spendall."

Data from British Museum

Much of her material on the family, she said, comes from the British Museum, where she traced it back to pre-Elizabethan days when Georgius Luppino ran afoul one of the Borgia lieutenants and fled to England.

She believes her late father, however, was as interesting as any of the Lupinos. His experiences on the stage were incredible.

For example, one night while playing Shakespeare in London, he slipped, fell and a wood splinter lodged in his brain. He got up, was momentarily a mad man and from him flowed Macbeth, Richard the Second, Merchant of Venice.

One of the first brain operations restored his sanity but his convalescence was quite as remarkable. It took months and he insisted on doing it not in a sanitarium but in the wings of a theater. Thus he was able watch his brother, Barrie, dance.

One night before curtain Barrie broke his leg. Stanley got up from his wheel chair and offered to go on.

"But you don't know anything about dancing," protested the tormented theater manager.

"I've been watching my brother a long time," Stanley insisted. "I can do it, I tell you."

He could and did-without a flaw. In fact, he was so successful that from that time on he never went back to Shakespeare.

These are a few of the items, but not the least will be his heroic death as an air raid warden.

Miss Lupino says she has visualized it many times and occasionally at night it fills her with terror. Nor has this part of her father's life escaped her picture work. The London blitz in all its vivid disaster rages about her and Paul Henreid in the current Warner Bros.' film, "In Our Time," opening Friday at the Strand Theatre.

She started gathering material on her father before this tragic event but since then it has been accelerated. It has acquired new importance to the last of the Lupinos.

It Was All Right with Ida Lupino But Paul Henreid Had Other Ideas

Romance and rain are being generously mixed on stage 22 over at Warner Bros. Ida Lupino and Paul Henreid are in an automobile for a scene as rain, generated by fans and pipes, pours down.

"But you mustn't think I'm unhappy," she says. "You've given me a most wonderful week.

"But this miserable rain," says Paul, looking up. "It was still wonderful," she reassures. He gets out of the car, holds the door open for her as he stands a little insecurely in the mud.

He steadies himself, looks at her and says:

"Jenny . . . will you stay . . . ?"

At that moment he slips, slides down the embankment. Before the director can call, "Cut," Ida with mock seriousness ad libs:

"Of course, darling. But will you?"

As the company laughs, Ida's reputation as a wit goes up.

Nancy Coleman Doesn't Foil Nazis in New Film

Nancy Coleman's film career lead her recently into several outstanding pictures, as "Dangerously They Live" and "Edge Of Darkness," in which her part was to lend her wiles to heroic underground movements in Europe. She almost arrived at the reputation of being an expert at foiling the Nazis.

Now in Warner Bros.' new production, "In Our Time," Miss Coleman is cast in a different type of role. She plays a dignified and aristocratic spinster, very happy in her home life until she discovers that dignity and high standing don't compensate for love and warmth. Pride prevents her from admitting that there is something missing from her life and tradition stands in her way to escape from the medieval air she was brought up in.

Nancy Coleman's ambition for the screen started early and blossomed into a remarkable career. Her constant will to get ahead, helped her along in her first hard years and finally resulted in her receiving a long term contract. Her first appearance was that of the psychopathic Louise Gordon in "Kings Row" and she handled it so well that soon she was given a more important role in "Dangerously They Live," starring John Garfield. The next steps featured roles in "The Gay Sisters," to be followed by "Desperate Journey." Her latest success was "Edge Of Darkness."

In "In Our Time," now at the Strand Theatre, Miss Coleman plays her part with such elaborate finesse and perfect characterization that the role of Janina will certainly be remembered as a further milestone in her career.

MARY BOLAND SEES END OF ANOTHER FILMDOM FIXTURE

Mary Boland, upon her return to the screen after a twoand-half-year absence, predicted the end of a Hollywood institution-the big house on the hill.

Miss Boland returned to the film capital to do one of the leads in the Ida Lupino-Paul Henreid film, "In Our Time," now at the Strand Theatre, but before doing so she disposed of her own house, one of the biggest in Hollywood.

"From now on it's a hotel for me," she said.

"It was a grand institution, with its lawns and swimming pools and unnumbered guests but it can't survive the changes that have taken place."

Miss Boland said that the first serious blow was the high taxes, and that the second one, the shortage of servants-has finished it off.

"The big house still exists in the physical sense," she declared. But the house as an institution has vanished. They can be occupied only under great inconvenience, unless you have a family, and it is becoming closer and closer to impossible to entertain."

She said that her house was Miss Boland said that one of her strangest experiences was the auction that disposed of of them."

"HERE, sit down in this chair," said Sherman, indicating an overstuffed one. "We've got plenty of time. Relax."

With his two subjects seated comfortably, the director discoursed on the subject of sleep, how he could use some himself, its general deliciousness.

HIS voice rumbled along in a monotone.

Finally the actress said, "Did anyone ever tell you that you have an awfully dull voice, Vince?"

The director nodded, Henreid shrugged deeper into the chair.

"In fact," she went on, "if you'd be quiet, I'd go to sleep."

She yawned and Henreid echoed.

"Better not do that, Ida," Sherman said. "Let's try to get the scene now."

The couple got up and took their places on a cafe set for "In Our Time," Warner Bros.' film opening Friday at the Strand Theatre.

"All right, let's go," Sherman called out.

Instead of the double buzz that indicates the cameras have started turning, there was only silence.

A Pole Cast as a Pole? In Hollywood? YES!

"It was very unorthodox of Hollywood," said Marek Windheim in commenting on being cast as a Pole in the Ida Lupino-Paul Henreid film, "In Our Time," now at the Strand Theatre. It is the first time in his four-year picture career that the Metropolitan Opera star has ever been anything but a Frenchman. He happens to be a Pole.

Vincent Sherman Knew His College Psychology Too Well

A well remembered college course in the psychology of mesmerism enabled Director Vincent Sherman to put Ida Lupino and Paul Henreid into a hypnotic half-sleep for the filming of a motion picture scene.

The two stars were called upon to portray a wine weary couple that had danced the night through. It was a bright Southern California morning, the birds were chirping outside the sound stage and the two players were bouncing with energy.

"Look at me," said Sherman, standing beside the camera. He stretched his arms, let out a long yawn, and through it said, "Gosh, I'm sleepy."

It worked. Both Lupino and Henreid yawned, and a half dozen grips, cameramen and electricians as well.

"ISTEN," said Sherman, warming into his subject. "You've got to be sleepy when you do this scene. I think you are sleepy, too. You look a little sleepy. You're sleepy, aren't you, Ida?"

yawn. "And how about you, Paul? Your eyelids look a little heavy to me." "I am sort of sleepy," the actor acknowledged.

"Uhuh," nodded the actress, suppressing a

ALLA NAZIMOVA RETURNS TO FILMS IN 'IN OUR TIME'

Alla Nazimova, who made "War Brides" at the height of her fame as a seductive beauty during World War I, has returned to the screen to play the mother in a story set against the background of World War

No longer the slim temptress but a woman in her early sixties, the actress still possesses a commanding appearance. She is playing the part of Paul Henreid's mother in the Ida Lupino picture, "In Our Time," opening Friday at the Strand Theatre.

"People ask me," she said on the set, "if I see a big change in Hollywood. I suppose I would if I had been a cinderella girl of the movies. But my ties have been too close and too constant."

Mat 110-15c ALLA NAZIMOVA

Madame Nazimova referred to the fact that since the days of the silent screen she has maintained her home in Hollywood, occupying a unit in a fashionable apartment house which she has owned since that time.

"As a result, wherever I go in the studios I see, among the new faces, the old familiar ones that I have known constantly for more than a quarter century. Old Hollywood isn't dead. It's still very much alive."

Since the days when Nazimova was a household word both here and abroad, she has appeared at intervals on the stage, mostly in New York ctiy. The greater portion of her time, however, has been spent living quietly in Hollywood, where in recent years she has devoted much attention to the preparation of her memoirs.

"After completing 'In Our Time'," she was asked, "do you intend to resume your work on the stage and screen?"

"That will be impossible," she replied. "I have never left the stage and screen. They are my life."

Actress Aids Rebuilding Of Russian Theatre

Hearing that Russia intends to rebuild from photographs structures that are considered national monuments, Alla Nazimova has submitted a collection of photographs of the theatre at Yalta, her home city in the Crimea, which the Nazis destroyed. The star returned to the screen in Warner Bros.' "In Our Time," now at the Strand Theatre.

The Thrill That Comes Once in a Lifetime: 'You See I Told You So!'

This might be called the triumph of an American prop man over three of Hollywood's European experts.

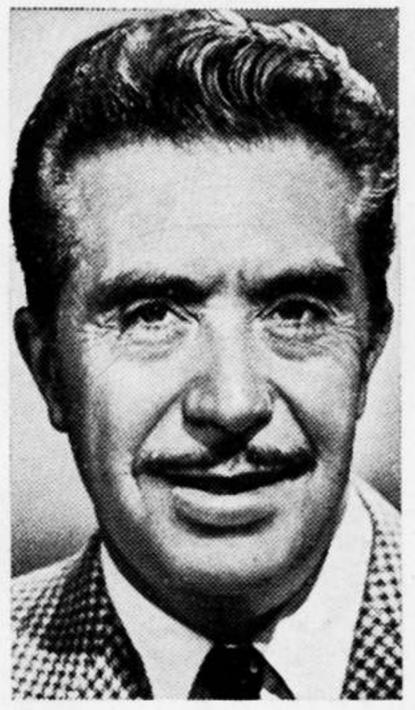

He had diligently assembled chairs for a Polish restaurant in the Ida Lupino-Paul Henreid film, "In Our Time," now at the Strand Theatre. Dr. Steven Barasch, Polish technical advisor on the Warner Bros. production, shook his head vigorously. They wouldn't do.

Marek Windheim, native of Poland, and Henreid, frequent visitor to Poland, joined Doctor Barasch in saying they weren't Polish. The prop man deferred and replaced them with the type of chair demanded.

Having done that, he brought one of the original chairs to Doctor Barasch, up-ended it and pointed to the underside. There it was as plain as life:

"Made In Poland."

'Be an Actor and See the World'—Actor's Motto

Still VF 3; Mat 107-15c VICTOR FRANCEN

Victor Francen's stage and screen background marked him as one of the finest supporting actors in Europe and, later, in Hollywood.

His stage experience in Europe was so varied that he was considered fit for any type of role. He is an actor through and through.

Francen never wanted to be anything else. Since his early age his motto was: "Be an actor and see the world." He achieved it, too.

He quit school at the age of 15 to join a small theatrical troupe in Belgium. His unusual talent was soon noted and brought him a long term contract in Brussels.

Later he came to Paris, his luck took him up and down. Success came soon and he made a name for himself. But an adventurous nature didn't permit him to stay in one place too long a time. He signed up with a theatrical traveling troupe and went half-way around the world

He came to America where he mastered the English language in six months. His first role here was in "Hold Back the Dawn," his first film for Warner Bros. was "Mission to Moscow" and then "The Desert Song" in which he was seen with Dennis Morgan and Irene Manning as the Caid Yousseff, tool of the Nazis.

In "In Our Time," now at the Strand Theatre, the part of the Polish Count, Pavel Orvid, is perfectly suited for this distinguished looking actor. His Continental manner helps him portray the part true to life and his performance will be recognized as worthy to the great cast of the picture.

Paul Henreid Debunks 'Continental Charm'

Mat 207-30c

Paul Henreid is starred opposite Ida Lupino in the Strand Theatre's current offering, "In Our Time," Warner Bros.' tender love story set against a modern background.

The traditional belief that American women are peculiarly susceptible to men who have what is called "continental charm" is a lot of outright nonsense.

That flat statement came from Paul Henreid, whose sensational rise to stardom following his appearance with Bette Davis in Warner Bros.' "Now Voyager" was attributed by many to the very continental charm which he so forcibly minimizes.

"The charm American women love is found as often among Americans as it is continentals," said Henreid, who, although Viennese born and bred, already demonstrates an exceptionally fierce American partisanship.

"I can cite for you an example, a man who is as American as apple pie and who has all the charm that I have ever seen in any continental. That man is Bill Tilden, the former tennis champion." Henreid insists that what American women like is not continental charm but a personality that has been mellowed by much experience.

"One of the best ways to get that experience," he said, "is by getting around in the world. That means not only travel in the physical sense, but coming under the influence of many different kinds of people. A man who has traveled and has had a hard time of it will pick up a certain amount of charm, be he American or continental."

Henreid, who is starred in Warner Bros.' "In Our Time" with Ida Lupino, opening Friday at the Strand Theatre, qualified his observations with that statement that while geography has little to do with charm, provincialism is one of its worst enemies. "And there is much provincialism among continentals," he said. "Certainly as much as there is among Americans and possibly some more."

Boy Still Meets Girl in Hollywood— Only the Plot Becomes More Ingenious

While the fate of continents, empires, and the world itself swings back and forth as momentous events unfold, the pattern of boy meets girl runs its usual course-except in Hollywood, where it becomes more ingenious with each passing picture.

As in real life, however, it is influenced by events; a large number reflect the news of the day.

The combination of timeliness with novelty is seen in the way Paul Henreid meets Ida Lupino in Warner Bros.' "In Our Time," opening Friday at the Strand Theatre. They are brought together by a lady's small watch which sounds the hour by playing Chopin.

Polish Antique Shop

The place is an antique shop in Poland, the time the eve of World War II, and the occasion a misunderstanding. She is looking at a window display from the inside, he from the outside. He assumes she is a saleslady and with gestures inquires about the watch.

When the argument in pantomine becomes heated, he enters and the argument continues verbally and it extends to the watch's Chopin. When she is identified as a patron and the misunderstanding vanishes, they are on their way to romance.

As if to prove that fiction is no stranger than fact, the boymeets-girl situation in "Mission to Moscow" was taken from the experience of the daughter of ex-ambassador Joseph E. Davies and it might have been contrived by one of Hollywood's more inventive writers.

The daughter, Emlen Davies, was skating in Moscow when her feet went out from under her and she skidded ungracefully across the ice. But swooping to her rescue came a tall and handsome stranger. A Russian? No, and here is where truth is a little stranger than fiction, because a writer would dare not use a coincidence like this. He was an American engineer on leave from a job at Stalingrad. His name was Robert Grosjean and today the girl is Mrs. Grosjean.

A pre-war introduction, but one up to the minute in novelty is the meeting between Jean Arthur and John Wayne in "A Lady Takes a Chance." She is a white collar girl who has saved enough for a tour of the nation by bus. At a rodeo out west she levels her camera to snap a handsome cowboy on horse back. There is a breaking of rails as a horse crashes through a fence, and instead of landing on the film, cowboy Wayne lands in her lap. It starts the romance.

Taken from Novel

The meeting of Gary Cooper and Ingrid Bergman in "Saratoga Trunk" was taken from the novel, but it is none the less original and charming. She is threading her way through the busy French market in New Orleans when she sees towering above the crowd a handsome westerner, six feet two of Texas and wearing a white sombrero. He sees her, too, and bold man that he is, he draws up in a fine carriage and tries to pick her up. Turned down, he follows her to a restaurant and there contrives to be invited to her table. But nostalgic, pre-war romances can't long crowd out today's themes that press for attention in Hollywood and in "Action in the North Atlantic" Warner Bros. arranges a meeting between Humphry Bogart and Julie Bishop that is dictated by the exigencies of the hour.

Bogart is the first mate on a freighter making the hazardous North Atlantic run. They bring the boats in, get them turned around quickly and then go out again. But Bogart gets a leave from his captain. It's urgent. He has to have a tooth pulled.

With that excuse, Bogart makes his way to a waterfront haunt. He meets Julie. There isn't much time for courtshiponly the time it would take to pull a tooth.

It's romance under pressure, but that isn't only Hollywood, out 1944.

Ida Lupino and Paul Henreid Stars Of 'In Our Time' at Strand Theatre

"IN OUR TIME"; directed by Vincient Sherman from an original screen play by Ellis St.

The antagonism between the titled aristocracy and the serflike peasants is great. The difference between the ideas of democratic and feudal minded people is even greater. Never before was there a stronger contrast brought to the screen than in Warner Bros.' new production, "In Our Time," which opened at the Strand Theatre yesterday.

The contrast is represented by Ida Lupino, playing a modern English girl, and Paul Henreid, portraying a Polish Count, inhibited with the traditions and customs of the feudal system. These two outstanding actors make this human drama of the present a memorable experience for the audience. Cast together for the first time, they play their respective roles with deepness and perfection seldom seen.

Meet in Antique Shop

They meet in an antique shop in Warsaw, the time, the eve of World War II, the occasion a misunderstanding. The girl is looking through a window display from the inside, while he stares at her from the outside. He assumes she is a saleslady and inquires about a watch. The misunderstanding vanishes and they are on their way to romance.

This strange meeting results in the most talked of marriage in Warsaw. A girl of the middle class to marry the aristocratic Count Stephen Orvid was something unheard of. But neither the general disapproval nor the objections of his family could lessen their happiness.

The war interrupts this happy marriage and Stephen has to join his regiment. Poland collapses and he comes home wounded. His family urges the couple to escape with them from the country but they decide to stay and burn the house that has seen so much hardship and so much good fortune.

The stars are supported by Nancy Coleman, as a bigoted spinster, intolerant and belonging to a feudal past, by Nazimova, returning to the screen as Countess Zofya Orvid, playing with the ease and poise of a great lady, Mary Boland and Victor Francen.

"In Our Time" is a story of two contrasting worlds, a story of the past, the present and the future, a story of love. It is a memorable picture.

In Our Time' Stars Lived Their Film Roles

"But, my dear, you haven't in parts which demand it." lived."

Those words spoken by an aggressive male to a young actress who wants to get ahead is one of the laugh lines in the show business, but it is spoken in all seriousness by young Vincent Sherman, director.

And his intentions are strictly honorable.

By way of explanation he nodded in the direction of Ida Lupino and Paul Henreid whom he directed in Warner Bros.' "In Our Time," opening Friday at the Strand Theatre.

"They're a good example of the importance of having lived, in the serious sense of that phrase," said Sherman. "They're Ida Lupino is playing a middle class English girl who suffers through the great bombing of England, and Henreid a young Polish nobleman whose security makes him blind to the treacherous forces of appeasement in pre-war Poland.

"Let's take a look at the way Ida's 'having lived' is paying off heavily in this picture," the director said.

"The two high points in the role for her are the London blitz and a separation from her husband. Ida has to be capable of realizing the agony of people who have seen their loved ones killed under Nazi bombs.

"Ida's 'living' has actually included that experience. Her father, Stanley Lupino, the great English comic, died as a result of injuries received in that blitz.

Husband in Service

"And as for the other experience, being separated by war from her husband, she's going through that right now. I understand Capt. Louis Hayward has just arrived in a combat zone. Ida's smart, she knows she might never see him again. Isn't it common sense to realize she's going to be convincing in that same situation on the screen?"

Sherman pointed out that Henreid is called upon to react in the film to a growing Nazi danger and yet to understand how a man can be seduced into inactivity by his comforts. That, too, in this case, parallels the life of the actor.

Henreid comes from the titled aristocracy of Vienna, and when the Nazis became powerful after 1933 he resisted the temptation to make peace with them and instead went to London, where he campaigned against them.

"Unfortunately none of this sort of 'living' can be acquired in order, as implied in the advice given by the designing male," summarized Sherman. "But aside from that, the advice is sound."

Once Gave Stage Role To Her Film Director

When Alla Nazimova was appearing in her own stage production of "Ghosts" in New York, one of her actors was ill and she had to replace him, she recalls.

A young actor applied for the part. He was earnest, very deferential, and she gave him the part. That was many years ago and she didn't meet him again until she returned to the screen to play her current role as Paul Henreid's mother in Warner Bros.' "In Our Time," now at the Strand.

When she appeared on the set she was introduced to him. He was Vincent Sherman, her director.

STAR CELEBRATES DECADE IN U.S.

Ida Lupino recently celebrated the tenth anniversary of her arrival in Hollywood. "And a turbulent decade it has been, too," commented the actress.

She came to the film capital 10 years ago and in the intervening years has experienced both triumph and tragedy. Her triumph has been stardom, her tragedy the war. It claimed the life of her English father and brought suffering to other loved ones.

Looking back across the decade, she recalled that her arrival was marked at once by trouble.

"I arrived in Hollywood as an imposter," she said. "Paramount brought me here as a demure and sweet child who could play the part of 'Alice In Wonderland.'

It was almost mistaken identity."

Miss Lupino explained that she had appeared as a gutter-snipe in an English picture, "Money for Speed," a type of role she knew well. There was a freak episode in which she pretended to be sweet and demure. That is what a talent scout clipped from the rest of the film and sent as his candidate for "Alice."

Studio Got a Shock

"When I walked into the studio, I've never seen people so shocked," reminisced the star. "I was only 16 but they wanted to know if I had dissipated on the boat, or what. I said, 'No,' and asked if they had seen 'Money for Speed'-all of it. They hadn't, but they did finally, and were they surprised!"

There followed a succession of unhappy roles in which she mostly played blonde scatterbrains. Finally she left the studio, established herself as a dramatic actress in "The Light That Failed" and then signed a contract with Warner Bros. where she won stardom as a result of films like "High Sierra," "The Sea Wolf" and "The Hard Way," which brought her the New York Film Critics award.

Her present role is opposite Paul Henreid in "In Our Time," now at the Strand Theatre, in which she plays an English girl married to a Polish army officer.

"A decade in Hollywood," summarized Miss Lupino, "made me a philosopher. My philosophy? Maybe if you work hard you won't be president; but if you work hard and have luck, you'll surely win that swimming pool."

PAUL HENREID NEW ROMANTIC TYPE FOR HOLLYWOOD

With everyone talking about a global war and the necessity for global thinking, Hollywood is filling a demand for a new romantic type, which may be described as international or global in its appeal.

This reflection of a changing world was turned up in the film capital by Dr. Stephen Barasch, formerly of the pre-war European picture industry, who declared that the new romantic type is distinct from the established foreign star in the tradition of Valentino.

"The transition from Hollywood's early foreign starsthrough Maurice Chevalier, Nils Asther, Charles Boyer-was accelerated by the war, thereby ushering in this new romantic hero perhaps a decade before his time," said Doctor Barasch, who has always been a student of American films.

He said the new type is exemplified by Paul Henreid, "who combines the Americanism of Gary Cooper with the continental suavity of Charles Boyera blending which is a product of recent world events."

Henreid Creates Pattern

Doctor Barasch predicted that other stars will be developed who will follow in the pattern created by Henreid, whose recent roles have won him wide acclaim, particularly from feminine fans. The actor is Swedish in origin, Austrian by birth and rearing and the product in recent years of the American and British legitimate stage and screen.

"Without the war and what preceded it the Henreid type would not be on the screen today," explained Doctor Barasch. "Henreid himself would be an actor of the traditional foreign type. But his revulsion from Nazi doctrines tempered the grace of his aristocratic rearing with an appreciation of democratic values."

Henreid fled Austria and his title of baron to make anti-Nazi films in London.

Seen recently with Bette Davis in "Now, Voyager" and with Ingrid Bergman in "Casablanca," Henreid's present role is with Ida Lupino in "In Our Time," opening Friday at the Strand Theatre, in which he plays a Polish army officer wed to an English girl at the outbreak of the war in Poland in September, 1939.

Doctor Barasch, veteran of the Polish fight against the Germans at Warsaw, has been engaged by Warner Bros. as a film consultant.

Nancy Coleman and Alla Nazimova are shown in a scene from "In Our Time," Warner Bros.' thrilling love story which started its engagement yesterday at the Strand Theatre.

STAY AT HOME AND LIKE IT, SAYS IDA LUPINO

What would happen to a confirmed Hollywood night club addict if she were deprived of late hour entertainment and told that for at least a year she would know nothing more exciting than her own fireside?

Fortunately, there need be no dispute. A laboratory test was completed today with the observance by Ida Lupino of exactly one year away from the film capital's night life.

Her retirement from the Hollywood cafe set was occasioned by the departure of her husband, Louis Hayward, for service with the U. S. Marine corps.

And her answer to the question is this:

"I'm surprised. It hasn't been painful at all. In fact, once you put your mind to it, home can be made more entertaining than any night club I've ever been in."

There is evidence that the star has put her mind to that very thing, making her home more entertaining, and friends say that she displays a high degree of originality in doing so.

Unique Parlor Game

For example, she has a parlor game which may well be unique, which she introduced at a recent party for Paul Henreid, with whom she made Warner Bros.' "In Our Time," which is now playing at the Strand Theatre.

It is designated to take the place of home recordings which are becoming difficult because of the war shortage of records. Her guests "broadcast" songs, jokes, and stories over an inexpensive public system she has installed.

Because most of the impromptu performances are spectacularly bad, the result is lots of laughs.

Ida's staying at home, however, is only one evidence of her concern with the absence of Captain Hayward, She has a typewriter standing in a conspicuous part of the house. Paper is already in the roller. Even without Ida saying anything—and she doesn't hesitate to do that either—the whole thing, typewriter, paper, and vacant chair, is an invitation to sit down and dash off a couple of paragraphs to the missing host, who happens to be in the South Pacific.

Concerning night clubs, Ida observes:

"It took a war to do it. But I've learned that old adage is really true. There's no place like home."

Still IL 348; Mat 111—15c IDA LUPINO

Cause:No Shoe Stamp Result: Black Toes

A man in Washington signs a document and a star in Hollywood gets black toes.

The literal truth of this became apparent when Ida Lupino appeared in Warner Bros.' "In Our Time," now at the Strand Theatre, in what appeared ordinary smart black shoes, but which on close inspection proved to be of the opentoed variety.

She had blackened both toes and stockings to get this effect, a move made necessary because she didn't have a ration coupon with which to buy the kind of shoes needed.

AMERICAN GIRLS MOST KISSABLE

American girls, you are the most kissable in the world, and therefore need not worry about losing your soldier sweetheart to sirens across the sea.

The American girl of 1944 has no rival, she is in a class by herself, and in the vast majority of cases contact with foreign girls will just make Johnny Doughboy that much more eager to return to his sweetheart at home.

These reassuring words were addressed by Paul Henreid, romantic continental star, to the millions of American girls who now have, or soon will have, boy friends in foreign countries.

"You don't have a thing to worry about," said Henreid, "the only girls who even approach you over there belong to an infinitely small class of wealthy people who have shrunk almost to the zero point as a result of the war.

"They are the only ones who can match your beauty, they are the only ones whose clothes can appear side by side with yours, they are the only ones who have your poise and confidence."

Henreid's opinion was confirmed by a foreign girl with whom he is now being co-starred in the Warner Bros. picture, "In Our Time," now at the Strand Theatre. She is Ida Lupino, English.

"Paul is right, of course," she said. "I wonder if American girls realize how fortunate they are with their abundance of pretty clothes and beauty parlors."

Henreid said it would take fifty years for European girls to catch up with Americans.

"It is more than beauty parlors and clothes," he said. "It's the self-assurance that those things give, and it's this self-assurance upon which the American girl's independent, somewhat impudent, charm is built. I have a hunch that it comes only after decades of being accustomed to the nice things."

First Day An Horse Left Its Impression

It was supposed to have been Ida Lupino's second day before the cameras on a horse side by side with Paul Henreid. She was riding for the first time in her life in Warner Bros.' "In Our Time," now at the Strand Theatre.

But her second day of film riding was postponed for 10 days, the shooting schedule having been changed to bring in other scenes first.

"Why the change?" a friend on the set asked the star. "Sit down and explain."

"Not for 10 days," replied Ida.

Nancy Coleman has a small heartshaped face. In both the old hair-do (below) and her new glamorous up-sweep (above) the face is framed to retain the line of the high cheek bones. The heart shape is accentuated by the soft feather bob. The sophisticated up-sweep is her new hair-do in "In Our Time".

Change the Rules, Girls, When He's in Uniform

If the gentleman is in uniform, girls, all of your traditional ways of expressing tenderness, the pressure of your hand on his, your arm gently on his shoulder, and yes, even the kiss itself, must be distinctly modified.

These and other intimacies between soldiers and their girls were given new patterns

Mat 101—15c Nancy Coleman

by Hollywood today when a list of the proprieties of military courtship was issued after consultation with army officers.

A study of the subject was made for use by Ida Lupino and Paul Henreid in Warner Bros.' "In Our Time," now at the Strand Theatre.

Changes demanded in a girl's way with a boy when he puts on a uniform were listed as follows:

1. The stroll. When you are walking with a soldier always stay on his left side, regardless of whether it would be otherwise proper. His right arm must be kept free to salute.

2. The dance. It is all right to put your arm across his, but if you lay your arm across his shoulder, you do so at your own peril. Shoulder insignia frequently inflict painful scratches.

3. The embrace. This is to be avoided when he is wearing medals, ribbons, and other decorations. They readily catch in a gown, and the result is both damaging to the dress and awkward at a moment when grace is imperative.

4. The kiss. Quoting Miss Lupino: "Go ahead as usual, girls. It's the same in all estates, military or civilian, in all ranks and all languages. Under the uniforms, they're still males. Only one slight, but distinct modification. The demand for privacy is somewhat relaxed for the duration. People will understand."

If still number is not given, photo is not available because the cut was made from a special retouch or a composite. (*Asterisk denotes still is available at local Vitagraph Exchanges.)

5. The dress. Avoid severely tailored clothes and uniforms. Emphasize the feminine. It is a courtesy to him for two reasons. It sets off the smartness of his uniform, and when he is with you he likes to get as far away as possible from the all male world in which he lives.

GREAT EVENTS 'IN OUR TIME' RECORDED FOR POSTERITY AND PRESENTED TO LOCAL LIBRARY

Prime Minister Chamberlain of Great Britain returned from Munich with the false promise of "Peace In Our Time". It is from that statement that the picture takes its title. But the great events "in our time", nonetheless, are exceedingly dramatic and filled with important and historic meaning. It would therefore prove most appropriate to make the occasion of the opening of "In Our Time" at your theatre the inspiration for a dramatic ceremony. Here's how to arrange it:

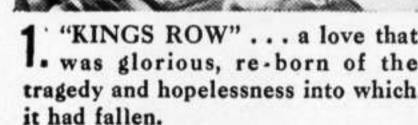

Invite the leading civic, military and educational leaders of your community to prepare a digest titled "In Our Time" to be enclosed in a heavy wooden chest and to be presented to the local library for permanent safekeeping. In this chest shall be enclosed copies of recent local newspapers carrying historic headlines; a recording by the Mayor outlining the part played by your community in winning the war; an Honor Roll of local boys in the service and pertinent photographs; a digest of the part played by your community in the production effort; copies of ration books, and other memorabilia of the war.

Here's Your Day-to-Day Set-Up:

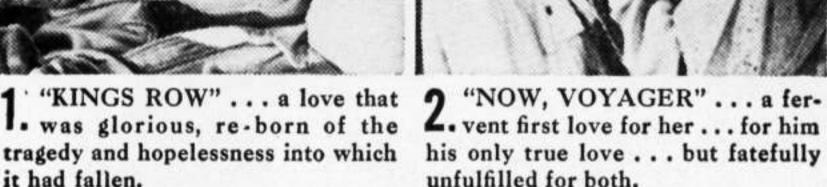

- 1. Story announces that leading newspaper is sponsoring this event and names key personalities in charge.
- 2. Presentation is made on the steps of the local library in conjunction with a bond rally. Large banner proclaims: "BUY BONDS FOR VICTORY ... AND PEACE " IN OUR TIME."
- 3. Radio broadcast of ceremonies ties in event with your playdate, commenting on the story of the film.
- 4. Keys for the chest are presented to the infant sons of three selected servicemen, to be used to open the chest on some future date. Picture and story of this presentation.

Arrange to preview the film for these commentators so that they may discuss the story of your playdate.

LIBRARY EXHIBIT LAUDS HOME TOWN'S DEVELOPMENT

Get the Chamber of Commerce, civic officials and key local industries to prepare an exhibit titled, "OUR TOWN...IN OUR TIME." This exhibit should portray the development of your community in the past fifty years—housing, parks, industry, schools, population and physical growth. Exhibit can then be shown in library or some other central location, with newspaper stories and pictures discussing it in contrast to the destruction of similar communities in Europe, as depicted in "In Our Time." A key feature of this exhibit should be a war bond booth.

'IN OUR TIME' FASHION DISPLAY

Tie in local department stores and fashion shops for displays showing the progress made in women's fashions during the past twenty-five years. If possible, display of future fashion creations should be included. All displays are titled "In Our Time" and carry credits for your playdate. Since the locale of the picture is Poland, Polish fashion influences may also be stressed. In addition, this same idea may be carried out by the larger shops for newspaper ads.

SURPRINT NEWSPAPERS

FILM DEDICATED TO POLAND

VERY seldom do we see films about Poland and the Polish people. Still less do we see films presenting Poland in a true light. That is why we welcome with sincere pleasure a film devoted in its entirety to the Polish cause and particularly to the sacrifices laid down by the Polish people during the present war.

Hollywood has produced many war films, but none however presented Poland in her most critical hour at the time of the eruption of the present bloody holocaust. A great deal of credit is due Warner Bros., film producers, for being the first to present a living picture of the heroic Polish people in the war. This picture titled "In Our Time" (W Naszym Czasie) has all of its settings in Poland.

From the technical side the picture is perfect. And little wonder for the producers have such war hits to their credit as: "Casablanca", "Princess O'Rourke", "Destination Tokyo" and "Air Force".

The title of the picture about Poland—"In Our Time"—strikes a sad and yet a hopeful note—because it was in our time that the start of the present world war, with the invasion of Poland, loosed on the world untold misery and heart-break; however, the tide of battle has turned and there is renewed hope for the unconquerables of Poland, that they will again regain freedom and independence.

The story of the picture is a romance—the love of two people who not only come from different social classes but different countries as well. He is a Polish aristocrat-she's English, a daughter of a music teacher. He is brought up in the principles of the old traditions, the aristocracy. She is brought up in the democratic principles of equality of all the people. However this combination of two such opposite types is successful. They build the foundations of a new Poland-the Poland of tomorrow-a democratic Poland. Due to them the old antiquated ideas of difference between the rich and the peasantry disappear. They form a unity, conscious not only of the rights of equality but, of the same duties, the same responsibilities for the fate of their country. The attack of the German hordes binds these ties closer. Because then to battle, in defense of their country, go "the man from the court" and the sons of the soil. When husbands went to war, "the lady" and the peasant women work side by side. The entire nation, all classes, stand in defense of their country.

Standing together at work and in battle, they stand together also during the period of destruction. When the enemy nears, houses and crops burn, ignited by the peasant and the gentleman, so that they would not fall into the hands of the enemy.

The action of the film develops from a background full of dramatic suspense. It begins in the period preceding the attack of the Germans upon Poland. At the beginning all is calm and peaceful, but gradually the sky darkens until at length the storm breaks. War. Over the radio we hear the heroic words of the Mayor of Warsaw, Stefan Starzynski, who calls upon his people to defend the capital.

The film reminds that Poland was the first to fight. The first to answer "no" to Hitler's demands. In defense of its liberty and borders she goes into battle, completely conscious of the superiority of the enemy. Against the tanks, stands a wall of soldiers chests; against thousands of airplanes, hundreds of Polish airmen; against the mechanized divisions fought the Polish cavalry. Military superiority ran over Poland, but did not conquer the Polish spirit. The Polish people were not conquered, and from the first day of the war fought bravely and will continue to fight until victory.

"Might is right"—Who can deny the might of a people who, even though their cause was hopeless, continue to resist the aggressor?—who can deny the right of a people to their share of a democratic freedom; a right they have earned through blood and tears shed for their beloved country.

The picture has a special message for Americans of Polish descent. It tells of the heroism and sacrifice of our brothers and sisters in Poland. It sketches a new picture of Poland, built on the principles of freedom and equality.

Time brings on new events. Events change with such confusing rapidity, that what is important news today becomes obsolete tomorrow in the face of new facts and information. What happened a month ago; a year ago, is covered today with the dust of oblivion.

The film "In Our Time" (W Naszym Czasie) reminds us all of events very recent. It reminds us of the battles in Poland. It speaks of the defense of Warsaw. This recollection is a salute and a tribute to our brothers and sisters in the old country.

This film will remind Americans that the Polish people deserve the same type of freedom as we here enjoy. It will acquaint them with some very revealing historical facts about pre-partitioned Poland.

That is why we should applaud Warner Bros. for producing this picture, in which they have so faithfully reflected the true life of Poland at the outbreak of hostilities. To our Polish ears it is very pleasant to hear Polish names and words woven into the action. Bravo! Warner Bros.

We are convinced that the film will meet with cordial approval and acceptance among all Americans of Polish descent.

DZIENNIK DLA WSZYSTKICH (POLISH EVERYBODY'S DAILY)

BUFFALO, NEW YORK-MONDAY, FEBRUARY 7th

"GLORIOUS AND TRAGIC PAST OF POLAND THEME OF 'IN OUR TIME'"

POLES OF BUFFALO AND VICINITY HONORED WITH WORLD PREMIERE

*It very seldom happens that a motion picture, possessing the proper theme and equal quality of production, earns the rating of "Excellent". "In Our Time" deserves such praise and justly so, because of many reasons. Produced by Warner Brothers and starring Ida Lupino and Paul Henreid, with a star cast of featured players, the picture is currently being shown at the Shea's Buffalo theatre on Main St.

It is noteworthy that "In Our Time" is the first picture, produced in Hollywood, which presents not only the true spirit of the horrible September Polish tragedy, but also depicts the glorious and tragic past of a nation that first took a firm stand against the Nazi hyenas. For us Poles, regardless of whether we came to America or were born here, the picture represents something phenomally valuable. Not only, that it reminds us of our glorious past but, it also will make us proud that others recognize the heroic deeds of our brothers and sisters, suffering under the Nazi yoke in occupied Poland.

The theme of "In Our Time" depicts the true love of two hearts, during Poland's hour of crisis, who wage a successful battle against the antagonism between the Polish aristocracy and the middle-class.

Paul Henreid, in his role of Count Stefan Orwid, acquits himself very creditably. His visits to pre-war Poland during which he must have gained at least a slight knowledge of the Polish language, make his characterization a very pleasing one, although in certain scenes he appears a little too formal.

Ida Lupino, however, who appears in the role of an English girl, Jennifer Whittredge, plays her part to superb perfection. Her portrayal of a modest middle-class girl who marries a Polish nobleman is so true and beautifully played that it earns for her the honor of portraying her best role in the past decade of her career in Hollywood.

Michael Chekov as Uncle Leopold also deserves praise for his understanding and sympathetic role of an old and poor relative dependent on his brother's charity, who even though he has spent his late years without accomplishing anything, gives much comforting moral support to the young count and his beautiful wife.

A fine performance is also given by Marek Windheim, a Pole, formerly a tenor with the Metropolitan Opera in New York, whose role permits him to quote Polish historical facts to his clients in his antique shop.

The role of the proud and domineering nobleman is well acted by Victor Francen. Alla Nazimova well-known stage and screen artist appears as the Countess, mother of Stefan. Also deserving of credit are Nancy Coleman as Countess Janina and Mary Boland as Mrs. Bromley.

Due to the fact that three of our countrymen, Marek Windheim, Richard Ordynski and Dr. Stefan Barasch as technical adviser, participated in the production of the picture, the film in its entirety is technically perfect and deserves to be rated among the best.

The action of the picture is alive and interesting, and in addition documentary, especially, during one scene, when one hears the heroic words of Mayor Starzynski, over the radio, calling the people to the defense of Warsaw.

The picture "In Our Time" should be seen by every Polish man, women and child, whose support it richly deserves.

Jutro Swiatowa Premjera PAUL HENREID & IDA LUPINO W Teatrze Shea's Buffalo

W marcu 1939 r. zwiedza Polskę młoda Angielka, Jennifer Whittredge (Ida Lupino) w towarzystwie starszej damy Mrs. Bromley (Mary Boland). W antykwarjacie w Warszawie hrabia Stefan Orwid (Paul Henreid) zapoznaje się z młodą Angielka.

Między przystojnym hrabią a młodą Angielką nawiązuje się romans, który zostaje uwieńczonym związkiem małżeńskim, pomimo sprzeciwów rodziny hrabiego. Młodzi są bardzo szczęśliwi i nie zważają na przykrości rodzinne.

Krewni hrabiego zrazu nieprzychylnie odnoszą się do żony hrabiego, zwłaszcza, gdy dowiadują się, że młodzi zamierzają wprowadzić pewne zmiany w majątku rodzinnym, celem ocalenia go od zadłużeń finansowych. Wuj Paweł usiluje zapobiedz zmianom.
